After what has seemed like the Indian summer to end all Indian summers, with the warm, dry days extending all the way to the end of autumn, winter is finally upon us, rearing its frosty old head and spitting a few raindrops our way. As we slide on down the barometer and assume our plaid flannel wardrobes, it seems only appropriate that we lean into the rich warmth of red wine for a bit of comfort; and to that end, we delve into the dark-skinned and mysterious grape that is Syrah. This languidly smoky, peppery, full-bodied wine is an ideal companion to bold winter foods, and it has made rapid inroads into the New Zealand palate as more and more of our best winemakers learn how to harness its unique qualities.

Elsewhere, we take a look at the talented winemaker and photographer, Kevin Judd, and his Greywacke label, review Church Road's 2013 release of the legendary Tom wines (a superb collection from what may be Hawkes Bay's finest vintage yet), share the fascinating story of the magnificent Krug champagne house, offer up a selection of prime New Zealand stouts for winter, check out – in the ascendent days of the single malt – the rebirth of the whisky blend and last, but by no means least, we feature on our back page Trinity Hill's release of their superb 2014 vintage wines, plus upcoming Glengarry tastings with TH's John Hancock. Along with all the usuals, of course.

Crikey. There's a lot to look at, so get on in!

CHÂTEAU
DURFORT-VIVENS
VIVENS 2009 44440

$69.00

The Durfort-Vivens vineyards share a boundary with the illustrious Château Margaux; at one stage both vineyards were owned by the same family, and the Durfort-Vivens wines were actually vinified at Château Margaux. The early-drinking little brother to their top wine, this is a Cabernet Sauvignon-dominant wine (some Merlot and Cabernet Franc balance the angularity), with a delightful palate of cherries, cranberries, slightly sweet oak and soft, rounded tannins.

GREYWACKE

Kevin Judd is a pretty good photographer for a winemaker. Or is it the other way around? Let's just say, then, that he is a major talent in more than one field, with both his wines and his photographs firmly positioned at the top of the quality arc (at Glengarry we have a collection of his varietal images on the walls of our Victoria Park Wine Room).

The founding winemaker at Cloudy Bay, where he directed the first 25 vintages, Kevin established his own label in 2009, naming it for the ubiquitous grey stone found throughout NZ. While the rock they're named for may initially seem a little monochromatic, the same cannot be said of Kevin's wines, overflowing as they do with character and finesse.

Prime viticultural sites within the central Wairau Plains and the Southern Valleys provide the fruit, which is then vinified by Kevin at Dog Point Winery in the lower Brancott Valley.

The high-quality Greywacke portfolio is primarily based on two varieties, Sauvignon Blanc and Pinot Noir, along with limited edition releases of Chardonnay, Pinot Gris, Riesling and Gewürztraminer. And the exquisite vineyard photographs on the labels? No prize for guessing where they came from.

Syrah

UNRAVELLING THE MYSTIQUE

The brooding and mysterious Syrah is one of the world's greatest grapes, capable of producing serious red wines that will age magnificently for decades. It'll also deliver appealing fruit-driven styles suitable for immediate sipping. DNA profiling (is that wine-loving scientists or CSI agents?) has established that it was derived from two indigenous French varieties found in the greater Rhône Valley, Dureza and Mondeuse Blanche.

The styles and flavour profiles of Syrah wines are significantly influenced by the terroir of site, soil and climate. Cooler-climate Syrahs, à la the northern Rhône and New Zealand, tend to be more complex, showcasing cassis, cherry, red berry and spicy/peppery, earthy characters. Grown in warmer locations such as Australia's Barossa Valley, Syrah ripens more easily and typically produces rich, lush, fruit-forward expressions channelling bold notes of blackberry, plum and chocolate, renaming itself as Shiraz.

Syrah has been adopted by winemakers across the globe with great success, ranging from the Old World's complex concentrated, long-lived styles to the New World's fresh, fruity offerings, each of them bearing price points to suit every budget.

FRANCE

As with so much else, the holy grail is all about France, and it is in the northern Rhône's cooler vineyards, perched atop steep terraces above the river, that Syrah finds its most distinctive expression. The finest are produced in the Hermitage, Côte-Rôtie and Cornas appellations – dark, dense, robust styles displaying trademark black pepper characters and capable of aging majestically. Some producers co-ferment their Syrah with a touch of Viognier, imparting an intriguing aromatic dimension.

PIERRE GAILLARD CORNAS 2010

$69.00 46854

When the winemaker says the 75-year-old vines are 'tended like a garden' you know there is some serious intent. Cherries, blueberries, liquorice and spice resonate with a length that suggests time is an old friend. Deep, intense, brooding.

RENÉ ROSTAING CÔTE-RÔTIE 2008

$79.00 48610

This is French wine aristocracy, with René the reigning king of Côte-Rôtie. The nose offers an aromatic smorgasbord of cherries, soft fruit and cocoa, while bright, silky berry flavours flaunt their florals. Impressively long and voluptuous.

NEW ZEALAND

Syrah has become increasingly popular in NZ, with our wines fast gaining global recognition. It is the third most-planted red variety, with Hawkes Bay claiming the lion's share. Waiheke Island's unique micro-climate is another favoured locale, and there are pockets in Northland, Marlborough, Canterbury and Central Otago. NZ's cool climate Syrahs are stylistically reminiscent of the Rhône models, displaying complex blackcurrant, plum, pepper and floral characters and elegant tannins.

CHILE

Syrah plantings in South America have increased spectacularly in the last twenty years, particularly in Chile. There, plantings have grown from 19 hectares in 1996 to over 7,000 hectares across a range of regions. The extreme length of the country provides a huge variation in climate, resulting in a diverse range of high quality, great value regional styles, from lusciously large and juicy in temperate areas like the Colchagua Valley to superbly spicy and complex in Chile's cooler climate zones.

SHIRAZ

While Shiraz and Syrah are genetically identical, in Australian conditions the variety has evolved its own distinctive style, characterised by rich, ripe fruit flavours and spicy nuances. Australia's signature red varietal, Shiraz is one of its greatest wine assets. The style has forged such a formidable international reputation that producers in other parts of the world – such as the climatically similar South Africa – use the name Shiraz to define their wine as belonging to the New World genre.

GLENGARRY VICTORIA PARK

Taradale's Church Road goes back a long way (in New Zealand terms at least), originally established in 1897 by ex-Marist Brother Bartholomew Steinmetz. Returning to his native Luxembourg in the 1920s, Steinmetz left it in the hands of its soon to be owner, the now legendary Tom McDonald, who went on to produce a series of high quality Cabernet Sauvignons 60-odd years ago.

Tom McDonald was well ahead of his time, but his passion for producing outstanding wines continues to flourish at this historic winery. Senior Winemaker is Chris Scott, who has worked at Church Road since 1998, drawing upon a superb range of varieties sourced from some of Hawkes Bay's top vineyard sites.

At the pinnacle of their portfolio are the TOM wines, a tribute to McDonald, who was one of New Zealand's true winemaking visionaries. They are expressions of exceptional character and quality and are only produced in outstanding vintages. With 2013 arguably the finest vintage ever seen in Hawkes Bay, these wines – now joined by a superb Syrah – are going to be incredible with some cellar time under their belts. One for true aficionados.

★ The TOM wines are only available in very limited quantities

While the TOM wines are Church Road's vinous Everests, they have a series of K2s that sit just below and offer incredible quality for the comparative dollars: these are the Church Road Grand Reserve wines, beautifully crafted and a real steal at under $30.00 apiece. They are produced only in great vintages, and with 2013 and 2014 in Hawkes Bay being an outstanding pair, they're hard to go past.

15211 CHURCH ROAD TOM
CHARDONNAY 2013 $155.00

The 2013 is a single vineyard wine off CR's Tuki Tuki Estate, originally established by McDonald himself. Hand harvesting, whole bunch pressing and wild fermentation deliver a full bodied but finely textured wine with exquisite floral- and mineral-tinged notes of peach and hazelnut.

15277 CHURCH ROAD TOM
SYRAH 2013 $199.00

The very first TOM Syrah, made from a single small, hand-managed area of fruit within CR's Redstone Vineyard in the Bridge Pa Triangle. Rich, concentrated and fragrant, with a warm, spicy, smoky presence and elegant, silky tannins. Will cellar comfortably for a good 10 years.

15117 CHURCH ROAD TOM
CABERNET MERLOT 2013 $199.00

Senior Winemaker Chris Scott rates this as their best TOM Cabernet Merlot yet, thanks in part to the dazzling 2013 vintage. The rest is just great winemaking. Dark, brooding, powerful and complex with a softly haunting aromatic presence. 3-10 in the cellar will reap rewards.

THE DARK ARTS: BREWS FOR THE STOUT OF HEART

Think of the humble Guinness on a brisk Irish afternoon. Nothing warms the cockles more than a dark, roasty stout as we wrap up and head indoors. Winding down from summer's lagers and golden ales we begin to reach for the toasty comfort of craft beer's darker delights, and some of New Zealand's favourite stouts and porters. Flavours of coffee, dark chocolate, or toasted oats make these brooding brews the ultimate comfort when the weather turns bleak.

Winter may be here, but we have just the antidote – a range of beers to sink into an armchair with in front of a roaring fire (or oil heater). From Auckland to Wellington to Victoria, we've got beers to snuggle up with from our favourite craft breweries. How about a little Garage Project Aro Noir or Galbraith's Rurik rolling with that roasty flavour? Or a hearty helping of Tuatara's Tiramisu and Mountain Goat's Surefoot Stout to put the coffee pot on? And let's not forget to get intimate with Funk Estate's Super Afro-disiac or Panhead's Blacktop Oat Stout. So get cozy, get crafty, get with the times because this winter, black is the new black.

THE RISE OF THE BLEND

While the mighty single malt holds us all in thrall within its peaty grip, there is no doubt that the blending of whisky is an art form that is garnering renewed appreciation. The spirit from the continuous column still perfected by Irishman Aneas Coffey in 1834 is blended with single malt whisky to make the lighter, more delicate Blended Whisky. These carefully-judged additions of single malt (sometimes using as many as 20 components) add the 'topping', introducing smoky elements, richness and cask flavours to the otherwise bland spirit derived from the Coffey Still.

92% of all whiskies sold are blended, with the vast majority combined with mixers. The mix varies, depending on where in the world it's consumed: you'll find whisky lovers adding coconut water in Brazil, green tea in China and Appletiser in South Africa, not to mention the ubiquitous Coke. Whatever you're doing, don't forget to add the water: an ice cube can make the world of difference as it melts into your whisky, releasing aromas, mellowing and smoothing out the flavour. Below is a selection of Scottish blends, plus one from Ireland. If you enjoy some peaty smoke, try the Kiln Embers from Wemyss or the Cutty Sark Storm. Sláinte!

LIFE BEYOND PORT

Yep, they're the go-to nation when it comes to port, but there is far more to Portugal's vinous character than that. Their winemaking traditions were forged by the Phoenicians, Carthaginians, Greeks and Romans, so plenty of history, plus a considerable array of native varietals available to draw upon. Tercius is the creation of Joao Ramos, who is modernising his country's wine styles to expand Portugal's global reach. Port house Churchill-Graham also champion modern Douro table wines and are developing a significant following for their offerings. The quality of these wines far exceeds the price as they strive for international recognition, so be in now, before everyone else works it out.

Krug

Krug. Even the name feels different to your run-of-the-mill champagne house, if there were such a thing. But Krug are undeniably different; their 'entry-level' multi-vintage Grande Cuvée – a blend of over 120 wines from ten or more years, cellared for at least seven years prior to release – is the equivalent of many higher-level offerings.

Krug inhabit their own distinct universe, producing only prestige champagnes and making no compromise when it comes to time or expense. The Rolls Royce of champagne producers? Quite possibly, and it would be entirely appropriate that they indeed own one.

In fact, the company's founder, Josef Krug, was originally from Germany. Josef's vision was to create the finest champagne possible every year, regardless of variations in climate. He was convinced that terroir was crucial, and to liberate the process from the rigours of being held hostage to the weather, he began to build a reserve of wines, each made of grapes from a separate plot of land with its own specific character. Josef drew upon this increasingly vast library of reserve wines to compose his prestige champagne, a practice that has been carried down now through six generations.

Josef, who kicked things off in 1843, was succeeded in 1866 by his son, Paul Krug, who was followed in 1910 by his son, Josef Krug II, who gave way to his son Paul Krug II in 1959. This round of generational pingpong carried the family through to 1977, when Paul II's sons Henri and Rémi took the reins, ending the Josef-Paul deadlock. Henri's son, Olivier, became House Director in 2009.

For those of you who like to drill down, all bottles of Krug feature a KRUG ID located on the left-hand side of the back label. This six-digit number (with the first digit indicating the quarter in which the wine left Krug's cellars and the following two digits the year) can be called up via your phone for all sorts of information about your particular bottle: the oldest and youngest wines that went into the making of your bottle, the details and challenges of the season, the objectives, to name just some of it. You can download the app.

This month we celebrate the release of the much-anticipated Krug 2002. (yep, the 2003 is already out, but Krug don't always release in sequence). While they themselves may view the 2002 as just another in a long line of superb expressions, this will be a remarkable wine.
