We're still waiting. For the cold, cold nights, so we can open all the red wine we've been stockpiling against the sleet and the hail and the ice and the snow and the rainstorms and the cyclones and the waterspouts that are arriving any day now. We're sure of it. Well, a little bit sure. Okay, we're not sure at all; it seems that the world of weather is spinning on its head, thanks no doubt to humankind's size 18 carbon footprint. Go green and save us all, we say.

However, green is not the colour du jour; that honour goes to its polar opposite, red, in all its myriad hues, from the delicate pink wash of Provençal rosés to the profound and inky depths of old vine Shiraz or Rhône-style blends. Low temperatures or not, it's a safe bet that glass of red wine is going to warm your interior and loosen the tension in your neck as it accompanies whatever hearty dish awaits. To that end, we've assembled a selection of local and not so local offerings that'll comfortably cover whatever part of the taste spectrum you have a hankering for.

On other fronts, we take a look at the pioneering Allan Scott's new Generations range, explore the fascinating story of the steely widow, Barbe-Nicole Ponsardin, who almost single-handedly nurtured the mighty Veuve Clicquot champagne brand into being, we check out one of our own vinous heroines, Jules Taylor, and her fabulous new single vineyard wines, visit Kiwi crafties 8 Wired, put out the welcome mat for the first of the Kiwi 2016s, and in our stores this month we tell you all about the beguiling world of fortified wines, including one of the stars of the genre, the Penfolds 50-year-old Rare Tawny.

Wait. Is that a southerly? Best get fortified.

PENFOLDS 25418
50-YEAR-OLD RARE TAWNY PORT
750ML $3,600 100 POINTS, ROBERT PARKER'S WINE ADVOCATE

Yes, we know: it's an eye-watering price tag. However, this is an extraordinary wine, the history of Australia's iconic Penfolds in a bottle. Although the average age is fifty years, its oldest wine component goes back to 1915, and it also contains rare tawny parcels from 1940, 1945 and post-World War II decades. Warm, seductive aromatic notes of vanilla, toffee and chocolate tease onto a smooth, silky, textural palate evoking vibrant characters of mocha, chocolate and fruit cake, with notes of salty plum and savoury spice insinuating themselves into the complex, multi-layered blend. Nothing is left to chance, with the hand-blown, number-etched bottle, precision-turned wooden stopper made from seasoned oak barrel staves, leather label, pewter crest and twisted muselet wire all meticulously hand-assembled.

ALLAN SCOTT

FAMILY WINEMAKERS

One of the very first, back in 1975, to put a spade into stony Marlborough soils and plant grapevines, Allan Scott has very much been there, done that. As head of his eponymous vinous empire, he has over decades forged a reputation for exacting quality and gone on to establish a strongly family-oriented and independent enterprise that involves wife Catherine, son Josh and daughters Victoria and Sara as integral members.

Allan Scott Family Winemakers have just released their new Generations range, a collection of single vineyard wines drawn from meticulously maintained, low-yield vines within the Scott family's own estate and produced in limited quantities. The range is a nod to the strong family involvement in the business and an acknowledgement of its intergenerational aspect. One gets the feeling that we're perhaps witnessing the beginnings of a genuine winemaking dynasty.

ALLAN SCOTT MARLBOROUGH GENERATIONS SAUVIGNON BLANC 2016

Veuve Clicquot

*'Let your intelligence
direct your life.
Act with audacity.'*

THE WIDOW CLICQUOT

The intriguing Veuve Clicquot, with their almost unrivalled cachet and unmistakable branding, are the epitome of elegance and daring. With over two centuries of champagne expertise under their belt, Veuve have forged themselves an enviable reputation, built around the mystique of the formidable Widow Clicquot. The House was originally established in 1772 by Philippe Clicquot. His son and heir, Francis, was being groomed to take over the bright yellow reins when he came down with a fever and died.

Up stepped his 27-year-old widow, Barbe-Nicole Ponsardin, both a visionary and a woman of exacting standards, tireless optimism and fiercely stubborn temperament who drove the business to giddy heights and is largely responsible for the huge profile the brand enjoys today. The French for widow is veuve, the name on the famous yellow label testament to her singular influence.

Towards the end of the Napoleonic Wars, facing imminent bankruptcy as she attempted to grow the fledgling business, Barbe-Nicole shipped her product to Imperial Russia, outfoxing the naval blockade that existed at the time and beating the competition to the Russian court by weeks, in the process pushing her brand into the global spotlight. She also bestowed her product upon the Prussian guards enforcing the blockade, the soldiers opening the bottles with their swords and thereby inventing the technique of sabring champagne.

With the new-found fame came the complication of keeping up with the sudden demand. In a game-changing move in the early nineteenth century Barbe-Nicole, with the assistance of her cellar master Antoine-Aloys de Müller, developed the riddling process, rotating the bottles daily for six to eight weeks and removing the sediment that formerly clouded the wine, rendering the crucial process of dégorgement both more efficient and more economic, and paving the way for an expanded market that had formerly been the exclusive province of the wealthy upper-classes.

The Veuve Clicquot vineyards cover 393 hectares, spread over 12 of Champagne's 17 Grands Crus and 18 of the 44 Premium Crus. The flagship non-vintage model, with its distinctive yellow label and high proportion of Pinot Noir, is a triumph of consistency and individual character, the perfect balance of finesse and forcefulness. The whole range, right through to the exquisite prestige cuvée, La Grande Dame, is quite simply superb.

8 WIRED'S SOREN & MONIQUE ERIKSEN

How often do you get the killer Christmas present? There can't be that many responsible for launching a new career path. Christmas 2005 brought Dane Soren Eriksen the gift of a Coopers homebrew kit from his soon-to-be wife and brewing partner, the visionary Monique. Under a searing Western Australian sun, devoid of any cooling system or experience, Soren embarked upon his brewing pilgrimage. Perhaps in search of a breeze, the couple moved from Australia to New Zealand, where Soren joined Marlborough's Renaissance Brewery, and they began, in 2009, contract brewing their own unique beers. In 2011, 8 Wired was crowned Champion Brewery at the Brewers Guild NZ International Beer Awards, and they have been listed as one of the 100 best brewers in the world on the Ratebeer.com site. These days Soren and Monique and their small team of boutique movers and groovers are ensconced in their very own facility in Warkworth. In a move bound to please their now global fanbase, 8 Wired have launched a new-look range of nifty 6-packs.

WOODFORD RESERVE

SMALL BATCH, BIG FLAVOUR

If Michelin were handing out stars to bourbon whiskey distilleries, Woodford Reserve would be a leading contender for their superb range of small batch, hand-crafted offerings. Their historic distillery is located near the town of Versailles in Woodford County, Kentucky, with the current distillery building the oldest operating distillery in Kentucky, dating back to around 1812 (although records show that distilling has been conducted on the site since 1780). The distillery is the smallest in the USA and the only one still practising traditional production methods, using mineral-rich filtered limestone water, a high percentage of rye to enhance spice characters and fermenting in cypress vat fermenters. After distillation in triple copper pot stills, the spirit is matured in a climate-controlled environment in new charred white oak barrels. Following maturation, the bourbons are bottled with a batch number and their own individual bottle numbers.

SUPERB Jules Taylor

SINGLE VINEYARD

Jules Taylor has been doing 'special' for a long time now, with her (for want of a better word) 'entry-level' offerings superior to many with more highfalutin titles attached to them. It's only recently that she's raised the bar and taken things up a notch with her OTQ range of single vineyard wines. So, very special grapes, with everything that's done to them done by hand. They look wonderful, taste even better. Go on.

A TASTE OF France

JEAN CHARTRON

This highly regarded Côte de Beaune estate was established in 1859 by cooper craftsman Jean-Edouard Dupard. In 1873, as mayor of Puligny, he was instrumental in obtaining the right to hyphenate the name Puligny with the prestigious Grand Cru vineyard, Montrachet. Now known as Domaine Jean Chartron, Dupard's family estate, has been handed down for five successive generations. It is currently run by Dupard's great-great-grandson, Jean-Michel Chartron, a dedicated believer in making wines evocative of their unique terroir.

Historically the focus has been in Puligny-Montrachet, where vines have been nurtured since Roman times, but there are also vineyards in neighbouring villages. In total the Domaine own 13 hectares of vineyards across 16 appellations. They include two Grand crus and three Premier crus. With access to much of Puligny-Montrachet's finest terroir, Domaine Jean Chartron specialize in the vinification and aging of great Burgundian whites. About 90% of their production is Chardonnay; the top appellations are fermented and aged in oak, while the regional wines are produced in a combination of stainless steel and barrel.
