The purveyors of New Zealand's largest, most comprehensive range of champagne, we're boarding the Bubble Train this month as it takes us on a global tour of where the sparkling wines are at. Starting out, of course, in New Zealand. It is, after all, nearing that time of year where the warm rays pick up the pace and the festive feel starts to insinuate itself into the system. Close at hand will invariably be a bottle of sparkling wine.

These days, the world of champagne knock-offs has become pretty sophisticated in its own right, with the best of the méthode traditionnelle wines, et al, giving the real-deal French sparkling aristocracy a damn fine run for its money. And of course, when it comes down to the dollars, one is often able to pick up an extremely accomplished bottle for a fraction of the price of something from Épernay.

Having said that, nothing has quite the cachet of a bottle from Champagne itself – those names are famous for a reason – and even here, there are bargains to be had via some of the more discreet houses, or from the intriguing and singular Grower champagnes.

Whatever your tastes and whatever your budget, we have a huge selection to choose from. Within these pages is just a taste of what we have available in our stores and on our website. And we've thrown in a few explanations of sparkling wine terms, just to add a bit of educational enhancement to your enjoyment. So cheers; dive on in!

Reserve Wines

The majority of méthode traditionnelle wines are non-vintage, or NV, meaning that they are multi-vintage blends. Initially a base wine blend is created from the current year plus a percentage (between 10-50%) of 'reserve' wine from previous vintages. The reserve wines are matured and held in storage until it's time for blending and the second fermentation. Whether that storage is in oak, stainless or concrete will affect the end result. Having a percentage of reserve wine in the blend provides balance and an all-important consistency to the house style.

Dosage

Dosage is the final step before corking. During dégorgement, a little wine escapes. The bottle is topped up with a blend of wine and sugar syrup known as the dosage. This helps to balance the wine, with the amount of added dosage determining the style.

SPARKLING WINE

Charmat

The Charmat method of making sparkling wine involves mixing the wine with yeast – and with sugar if needed – and transferring it to a sealed, temperature-controlled pressure tank where a second fermentation occurs. When the second fermentation has been completed, the yeast lees are filtered and the wine, kept under pressure, is then bottled. The process is ideal for creating and preserving the fresh aromatic characters of Italy's classic Prosecco styles.

Méthode Traditionnelle

Sparkling wines can be produced in a number of ways, but the most admired are the classic méthode traditionnelle wines, using the system developed in Champagne. Following an initial fermentation, blended still wines are transferred to bottle with a selected yeast solution and sealed. This initiates a second fermentation in the bottle, creating alcohol and carbon dioxide bubbles that dissolve in the wine. Time spent on lees leads to greater complexity in the wine. Costly, labour-intensive, the time-honoured méthode traditionnelle system is the favoured process of sparkling winemakers the world over.

Dégorgement

An integral stage of méthode traditionnelle production is the process of dégorgement. During fermentation, a deposit of yeasty sediment settles in the bottle, where it provides additional nuances and complexity during the maturation period. The bottles are moved, and gradually upended so that the sediment collects in the neck. The neck is then dipped into a freezing brine solution. The initial closure is removed and pressure within the bottle shoots out the frozen sediment pellet, leaving the wine clear and ready for the final stage of the process.

Grower Champagne

Many vigneronns in Champagne sell their fruit to the large established houses, but a good number of small, family-run units craft their own champagnes from their vineyards. The wines are often bottled on the premises and come in a diverse range of distinctive styles that are a reflection of the idiosyncrasies of their particular terroir. Grower champagnes are not a new concept, but the diversity, complexity and individuality of these boutique styles sets them apart from the mainstream. With corporatization of the industry so prevalent, many aficionados are developing a taste for these smaller scale, hand-crafted champagne styles.

Vintage Champagne

Vintage champagne is created from the fruit of a single year, as opposed to their invariably cheaper non-vintage siblings, which, to maintain a consistent house style, are drawn from a pool of reserve wines from a number of vintages. These singular champagnes champion the individual qualities of a particular vintage, which means that some years are going to be special, and some less so. It's all about the grapes being in optimum condition. After the second fermentation and disgorgement, the wine must, by law, be matured for at least three years. With the serious producers, it will be for longer.

Grand Cru

Champagne's classification system scores the village each vineyard is located in. Working from a 100-point scale, 319 villages are graded for their historical grape growing potential. # LAKE CHALICE

ONE EYE ON THE SKY

Taking its name from the beautiful wilderness lake in the Richmond ranges bordering Marlborough's Wairau Plains, Lake Chalice has forged a significant reputation since its inception in 1989. Its labels feature the magnificent Karearea, New Zealand's endemic falcon, with the winery assisting in bringing attention to the raptor's increasingly endangered status. Once prolific within the Marlborough region, the Karearea is today threatened by introduced pests and other human-induced hazards. Lake Chalice has long been an ardent supporter of the Wingspan Birds of Prey Trust, which helps to preserve and rehabilitate our birds of prey. The winery is also active in the Falcons for Grapes project, an initiative that recognises their ability to contribute to the control of grape-loving pest birds.

CHAMPAGNE & MALT TOUR

AUCKLAND | TAURANGA | WELLINGTON | CHRISTCHURCH | QUEENSTOWN

Glengarry Head Honcho Jak Jakicevich and GM Liz Wheadon both have their fixation. Jak is a committed fan of Single Malt whiskies, while Liz is a champagne fiend from way back. They are teaming up to take their respective obsessions on the road, perhaps in an attempt to justify them to the rest of NZ, or maybe they just want to share some gems they know about with those of you who don't. Anyhow, there they both are, out on the road, taking it to the streets. Each of them will be flourishing the attributes of six of their favourites. Is it a duel? A face-off? We don't know. Will it be entertaining and enlightening? Absolutely.

EMILIANA

ENTHUSIASTICALLY ETHICAL

Founded by Chile's Guilisasti family, the inspirational Emiliana Organic Vineyards are located in Chile's Casablanca Valley, and own vineyards in some of Chile's best winemaking areas. Their organic and biodynamic way of winemaking started out as a trial. When they saw the resulting difference in their wines, not to mention in their people, they started moving more and more vineyards over. For the team at Emiliana, this is a comprehensive, interlocking system that involves the creation of balanced vineyard ecosystems within which a host of animals, birds, insects and plants play a part in the maintenance of vineyard balance, acting as natural pesticides, weed killers and compost producers. Emiliana staff are guaranteed a fair wage, the workers offered technical scholarships and provided with land to grow their own organically-ultivated fruit and vegetables. The wines themselves are very accomplished: expressive, fragrant, clean and cooler in style, owing to the proximity of the sea.
