Spain

COPING IN A PICASSO WORLD

Hello from Autumn. It's been such a fabulous summer, we thought we'd continue to clutch wildly onto the feeling and go to Spain where, we're told, it's quite warm. The Spanish do a great job of channelling that wonderful European sensibility that says life is all about putting the right wine with the right food, and the right company, and just going for it. If you've not yet stepped aboard the Spanish bandwagon, there's no time like the present; you'll quickly see what you've been missing. No other country has turned its wine industry around in such dramatic fashion, via a combination of opportunity, technological advances and a fearless new generation of winemakers. Theirs are exotic, heady, muscular, succulent and sexy wines that have converted a generation as the world discovers the exciting new flavours and outstanding value of the offerings from one of the oldest vine cultures in Europe.

SIR GEORGE FISTONICH

VILLA MARIA

MAN WITH THE GOLDEN TOUCH

Founded by Sir George Fistonich in 1961, Villa Maria Estate has risen to become New Zealand's most successful international wine brand. For a number of years New Zealand's most awarded winery, earlier this year it added another significant feather to its cap: at the Drinks International Awards Ceremony held in Germany, Villa Maria was named the third-most-admired wine brand in the world. Closer to home are the 12 gold medals and three trophies from the recent Royal Easter Show Wine Awards. Anyway, you get the picture. What's impressive is that the horde of medals and awards is not restricted to their top releases, but can be found across the entire Villa Maria portfolio. According to Sir George, the secret of their success doesn't lie in chasing accolades, but in focusing on making superior quality wines that have instant appeal for the people who drink them.

ALMANSA

In the central Iberian plateau, Almansa enjoys hot summers reaching temperatures up to 38 Celsius, down to -6 degrees in winter. This part of Spain is wide and expansive, a sea of flat plains with little rain and copious wind farms and solar panels. Grenache and Tempranillo love the heat and the long growing period found in these harsh conditions.

Located within the foothills of the Pyrenees north of Barcelona, Empordà is a relatively unknown wine region. The varietal mix includes Spain's mainstay Garnacha (Grenache) along with international varietals Merlot, Syrah and Cabernet Sauvignon. The wines lack the high prices that would accompany a greater international rep, so there is some good value to be found.

UTIEL-REQUENA

On Spain's eastern coast, Utiel-Requena is historically linked to producing more bulk wine than quality. A few producers are starting to adjust this view. One leading the charge is Mas de Bazán, which is rapidly procuring a rep for its excellent reds. The variety of note is the indigenous Bobal grape, which somehow thrives in the extreme, dry conditions and poor soils.

Put A Sparkle In Your Glass

The von Mumm family, whose lineage boasts barons and knights, can be traced back to the 12th century. The German family established their champagne house in Reims in 1827, with its most notable creation being the Cordon Rouge, which was first released in 1875.

MUMM CHAMPAGNE

One of the world's biggest-selling champagnes, the G.H. Mumm livery has recently undergone an upgrade. The nose of citrus, peach and vanilla is enhanced by Mumm's trademark biscuity nuances. It offers a silky, mouthfilling mousse and a lovely fresh, lingering finish.

Very few champagne houses remain in family hands. Pol Roger is one that does. Highly-skilled vinous alchemists in possession of an exquisite collection of wines, they are not one of the region's show ponies, but are, nonetheless, at the front of the pack in terms of quality.

Mother's Day Sunday 12th May

Mums. Where would we be without them? We'd be the first to say that showing appreciation for your mother should not be restricted to one day of the year (ditto for the love of your life and Valentine's Day, but that's another story). Anyway, regardless of the above, your mum is probably going to be quietly expecting some acknowledgement on the 12th. She just might like a wee tittle, too. Check these out.

Jules Taylor rocks as a mum and as a winemaker, so major multi-tasking achievement right there. The singular nature and quality of her boutique expressions has garnered many awards, and a following that spans the globe. Juggling motherhood with winemaking, Jules continues to do things in her own inimitable fashion. So it seemed rather appropriate that we offer you a pair of her star wines, neatly packaged together, ready to present to the deserving recipient of your choice (You can also, naturally, buy either of the wines on their own).

AO YUN 2015

THE EAST VENTURES WEST

Himalayan wine? Who knew? Ao Yun have been working out what that is since 2013. Frenchman Mazence Dulou is Estate Director and Winemaker. Born and raised in le Sauternais, he brings Gallic smarts to the operation, moving his family to the beautiful village of Adong in the breathtaking Yunnan province. With its warm year and large harvest, Mazence considers the 2015 Ao Yun's greatest vintage since they began. A blend of four villages, 79% Cabernet Sauvignon and 21% Cabernet Franc, the wine is voluptuous and spicy, with a suitably exotic nose, a soft, dense, rounded palate and a long, mineral-edged finish. Embrace the new!

25 STEPS

NEW FROM AKARUA

Perched on an ancient glacial slope, Akarua's 25 Steps is a stunning single vineyard site in Central Otago's Pisa, a dramatic terraced vineyard covering 120m of elevation that is planted entirely in a wild mix of Pinot Noir clones from Pommard and Dijon. Highly undulating and exposed, with a multitude of natural microclimates, the flavours from this vineyard are wonderfully complex and utterly unique. The rosé is a seamless profusion of florals and strawberry with notes of cherry, hazelnut and mandarin, a delicate smoky thread, fine acidity and a subtle mineral edge. The Pinot Noir exudes haunting aromatics of raspberry and cherry on a vibrantly textural and smoky palate with a pronounced mineral note and lovely taut acidity.
